Webpage Critique Questions

The Big Picture
1) What have you learned from this website that you did not previously know?

2) How can you tell who are the creators "talking" to, or writing for?

3) Is there an introduction to the website and on each page? Does it make you want to read more? Any suggestions for improvement?

Summaries

4) Do the summaries of the myths provide you with enough information to get a complete sense of the myth, or are they incomplete?

5) Do the summaries make you want to continue learning more and to read the analysis?

Introduction
6) How does the introduction draw you in? What is the thesis?

7) What claims have the authors made about the myths and their interpretations?

8) What suggestions do you have for improving the thesis?

9) Does the introduction provide a short but useful map for the rest of the document?

10) Do the main points of the document correspond to the expectations provided by the introduction? If not, where is there a disconnect?

Body
11) Are topic sentences easy to identify and understand?

12) What suggestions do you have about structure and organization?

13) How have the authors made sense of the different versions of the myth? How have the authors addressed and/or reconciled similarities and/or differences? What "cultural issues" have been raised and addressed (e.g. gender, ethnicity, religion, etc.)?

Finding Information/Ease of Reading
14) What have the page creators done to make information easy to find?

15) What is the most important information on the page(s)?

16) If the text is difficult to read, why?

17) Why have images been included?

18) When was the site last updated? What sources have the creators used?
